Nobody knows why, and he feels very much like an outsider even though his family is loving and supportive, and so takes on business trips as an excuse to get away for small periods of time.

Discovering Villa Foscari (Italy Book 18)

Maurus, craving his father's blessing, and departing in all haste at his commandment, ran to that place upon the water, to which the young lad was carried by force thereof, thinking that he had all that while gone upon the land: and taking fast hold of him by the hair of his head, in all haste he returned back again: and so soon as he was at land, coming to himself he looked behind him, and then knew very well that he had before run upon the water: and that which before he durst not have presumed, being now done and past, he both marvelled, and was afraid at that which he had. Hey, Priscilla.
