I expect you'll be glad when I leave. I am afraid that here we are impinging on an idea which, since the time of Lavater, has been the ruling principle of physiognomists and popular racial-biologists, namely, that a strongly-developed under-jaw is, as it were, a shameful little inheritance from the gorilla, a hall-mark of those people who make up for the incomplete development of their higher moral cerebral centres by a proportionately generous endowment of vegetative apparatus, and who would be condemned to untamed animality and criminality this in the older physiognomical literature or, in our case, to a gentler material feeling for things natural.
